

PERFORMANCE AT WORK™

6 REASONS

Your Coworkers Want You to Stay Home When You're Sick. Period.

1. Because sales guy brings home more than deals from business trips.

So he lands deals, boosts profits and always knows the right thing to say even when he only sort of means it. He just got back from a conference in Vegas where he shook a thousand hands, and at least one of them had the flu. Guess who's bringing home souvenirs.

2. Because sick lady just won't stop coming to work sick.

She's the ultimate team player. Productive. Driven. Carrying a tiny hint of nasal discharge wherever she goes. Happy sharing!

3. Because your boss acts like a real baby when he's sick.

He's the admirable captain of our little ship, and we're glad to have him signing all the checks. Unfortunately, when he's sick, he becomes an irritable 4 year old who just blew through nap time. No one wants to tell him to go home, so let's just make sure to keep a clean germ-free workplace, mmmm kay?

4. Because science is still working on a name for whatever your supervisor has.

Whatever it is, it's wetter than a cough and louder than a sneeze. It just can't be good.

5. Because you're a few nose whistles short of an orchestra.

You know that new girl in accounting? The cute one who started last week and hasn't stopped sniffing since she got here? Yeah, we're not fans.

6. Because we're all in this thing together.

There's only one way out of this office. Get in, get out, find some hand sanitizer, and pray you didn't forget anything at your desk.

